

On Lake Koshkonong: I'm a property owner on the lake and read last Wednesday's article about limiting the DNR's power on water levels. The DNR has done a very poor job regulating the water levels for the 15 years I've lived there. We need to let local governments have more control.

-- We should remove the dams on the Rock River and let the lake heal. Let that swamp return to a swamp. It will reduce pollution from all the boats as well as from stuff people dump in the lake. Let's leave something good for our children and grandchildren instead of taking, taking.

-- I'm responding to Sunday's Sound Offs. This is just more posturing and strong-arming by lake district Chairman Brian Christianson. The Gazette has become his puppet. Perhaps these people would like to see what 7 more inches would do to the remaining few wetlands on the lake. They care more about big boats and summer fun than the environment.
