

On Lake Koshkonong: This is in response to the Nov. 27 article. The DNR has a difficult decision because scientific and economic data support the Rock Koshkonong Lake District's request for higher water levels. It's time for the DNR to take a fresh look at the request with qualified individuals who do not have a bias, rather a consideration for all groups involved.

-- I live on Koshkonong and support the district's efforts at the state Capitol to limit property regulations (Page 2A, Wednesday). Since 2013, the DNR has ignored the Supreme Court decision. Brian Christianson and his colleagues at the district are fighting the good fight to protect our fishing and home values. I urge area legislators to support this legislation.

-- Legislation to limit the property regulations imposed by the DNR should be supported by all the state legislators and anybody who can help. The DNR has been unresponsive to property owners around Lake Koshkonong and on the Rock River ever since the lake district was founded.
